

Allied health and nursing

Nursing and allied health services are a vital part of the growing healthcare sector.

Growth is being driven by increased demand for National Disability Insurance Scheme services, our ageing population, investment in hospitals and demand for home-based care.

With the demand for healthcare workers rising, hospital and allied health staff will continue to play an important role in the recovery and rehabilitation of clients and the community.

As well as our popular nursing courses, we offer a diverse range of certificate courses that enable you to become a qualified allied health assistant, ageing support and/or disability support worker, dental assistant, sterilisation technician or pathology collector.

As a nursing or allied health student at Chisholm, you'll learn from experienced teachers in our modern, state-of-the-art health precincts and labs at our Berwick and Frankston campuses.

For a full list of allied health and nursing courses and the latest course information, including entry requirements, payment options and intakes, visit chisholm.edu.au/health.

Student story Brooke

Brooke enrolled in Chisholm's Certificate IV in Disability as she wanted to inspire other people with disabilities to reach for the stars.

As someone with auditory processing disorder and developmental dyspraxia herself, Brooke felt she was in a special position to help.

"I wanted to show everyone that even though I have a disability, I can still do the job just like everyone else," she says. "Sure, I have a disability, but it doesn't limit me in what I want to do."

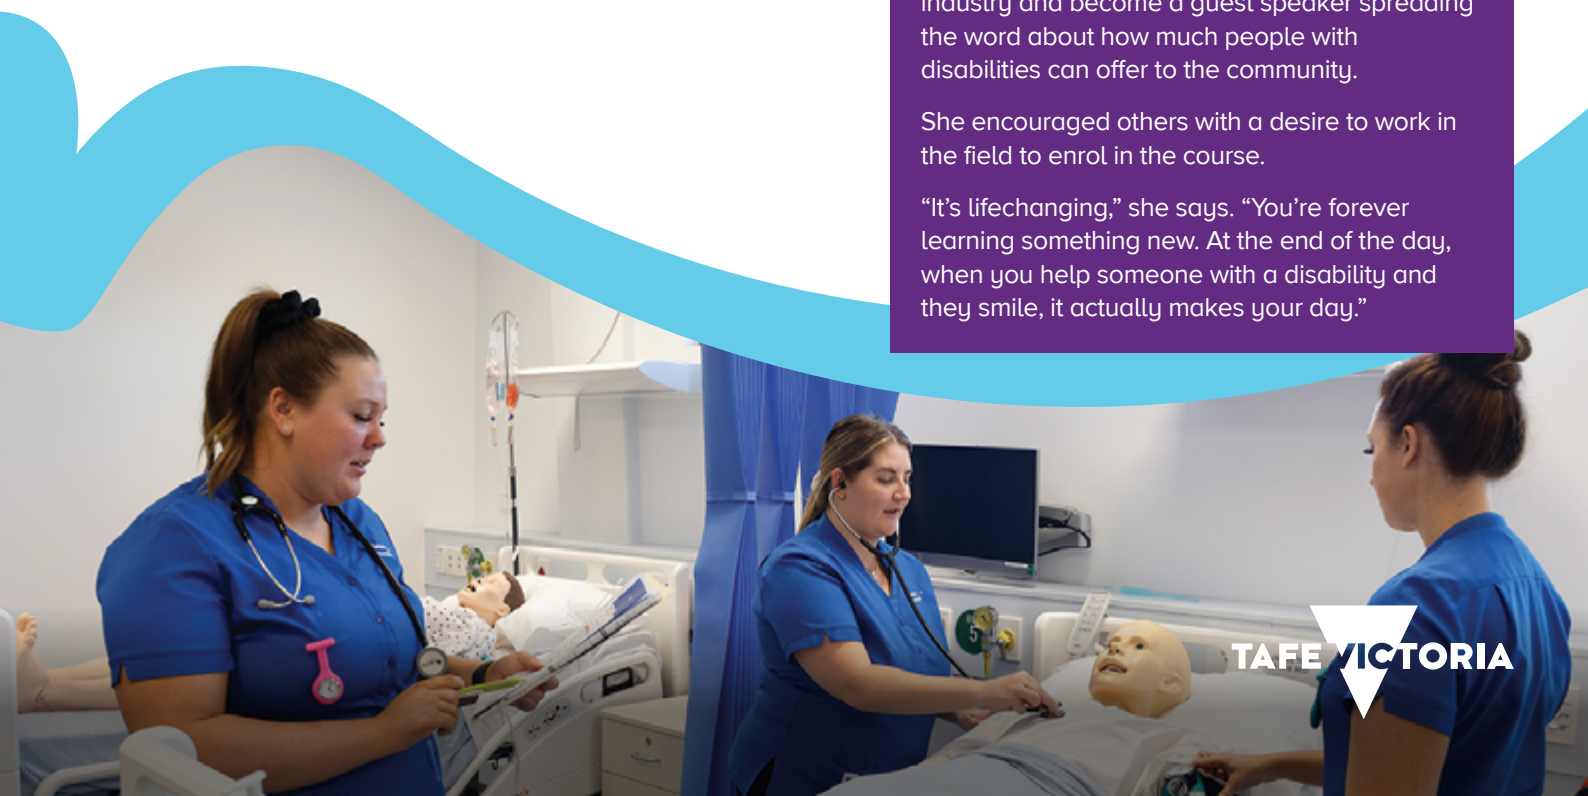

Having faced bullying in the past due to her disability, Brooke found Chisholm to be a safe learning environment.

"At the beginning of the year, I was nervous doing role plays and didn't want to do it in front of others," she says. "Now, I help other students with their assessments, speak in front of everyone and I'm feeling more confident now to go to job interviews because of the confidence I gained at Chisholm."

Brooke's dream is to work in the disability industry and become a guest speaker spreading the word about how much people with disabilities can offer to the community.

She encouraged others with a desire to work in the field to enrol in the course.

"It's lifechanging," she says. "You're forever learning something new. At the end of the day, when you help someone with a disability and they smile, it actually makes your day."
