Student story James

When he agreed to keep a friend company on a short art course, ex-serviceman and teacher James couldn't have predicted the positive impact it would have on his life.

After finishing the eight-week short course, he enrolled at an art college. Unfortunately, James soon realised that he wasn't learning the basics he needed to carry out the artistic ideas he was having.

"I decided to do the (Chisholm) TAFE course because I thought it would give me a better grounding in the basic skills, which is exactly what I found."

James studied the Diploma of Visual Arts (Fine Arts) part time, hoping to delve further into the arts and hone his new-found skills.

"The thing that grabbed me the most last year was sculpture. I also really enjoyed print making, which I'd never done before. I seem to have the ability to produce images that suit that medium."

While his pieces are very personal, they've reached a much wider audience. His works were selected for a travelling art exhibition for the Shrine of Remembrance and he placed in the top 10 for the Napier Waller Art Prize in 2019.

James' story is sure to continue inspiring not only veterans, but people who might be seeking a new sense of purpose or healing through study.
