

Community and social services

Community services work is a highly rewarding and respected career choice.

This growing industry encompasses a huge range of diverse roles, including mental health, drugs and alcohol, family violence, counselling and youth work.

Working in this area means you'll be engaging with, and working alongside, some of our community's most vulnerable clients – and seeing the growth and positive change you can bring about together.

We offer a variety of generalist and specialised courses, from certificate to diploma and higher education qualifications.

If you care about creating positive change in people's lives, you can forge a career as a valued community services professional.

For a full list of community services courses and the latest course information, including entry requirements, payment options and intakes, visit chisholm.edu.au/communityservices.

Student story Jacynta

"I'm a really hands-on learner," Jacynta says. "The teachers didn't just read off slides, they'd give their life experiences, whether in mental health or youth engagement. That made it easier for me to retain information."

Jacynta found her calling as an Indigenous youth worker, helping young people to reach their full potential.

Jacynta is a proud Aboriginal woman living on Wurundjeri country, whose ancestral ties link to the Kurna people of Adelaide Plains and Narrunga people of Yorke Peninsula, South Australia (Point Pearce Mission Station).

Growing up, Jacynta watched her single mother, who is now an Elder, work with Indigenous young people in the south eastern suburbs of Melbourne and was inspired to do something similar.

After finishing Year 12, she tried a few different careers before an opportunity presented to become an Indigenous youth worker.

Jacynta enrolled in Chisholm's Certificate IV in Youth Work, which gives students the skills needed to engage effectively with young people and help them to reach their goals.

Jacynta found the Chisholm course invaluable in helping her to progress her career.

Twelve weeks out from completing her qualification, Jacynta landed her dream role as an Aboriginal youth case manager and mentor – an outstanding achievement.
